 Ribosomal proteins and ribonucleoproteins in mRNA. Ribosomal proteins are defined as ribonucleoproteins that are present in ribosomes. Ribosomal proteins belong to a series of highly conserved, multifunctional and multifaceted proteins. In all cells, ribosomal proteins play important roles in many aspects of translation, especially in mRNA biogenesis and maturation. Recent studies have suggested that ribosomal proteins are involved in pre-rRNA processing and the formation of the 40S and 60S subunits. In the assembly and maturation of the large ribosomal subunit, ribosomal proteins mediate the separation of the 40S and 60S subunits into the mature 80S ribosome. In addition, a large number of ribosomal proteins are involved in post-translational modifications (e.g., phosphorylation and ubiquitination) of the nascent polypeptide chain. Current research suggests that, in addition to the typical functions of translation initiation and elongation, ribosomal proteins play important roles in the efficient translation of most mRNA in plants and animals. In this review, we will focus on the various mechanisms of ribosomal protein function in pre-rRNA processing, 40S and 60S subunit assembly and the translation of mRNA and discuss the evidence for their involvement in these processes.
 Q: How can I force Android to force hide the Alarm Manager? I have an Android application that's showing information in a notification, and I want to replace the notification with a new one if the user has the old one already active. I'm using setExact(long millis) to prevent the old notification from being destroyed. The problem is the exact time that the notification is displayed on the Android phone is set with the Alarm Manager (see 3da54e8ca3
