from college: leaving the family nest Spring has sprung and you have left college behind and are excited about the next chapter of your life. The campus is where you first found your footing as a college student, and it is where you left a piece of your heart and soul in the form of a college diploma.
All your hard work has paid off and you are finally graduating. As your feet hit the ground of real life, you may not be ready to say goodbye to your childhood. You want to spend one last year enjoying the company of family and friends, a summer in a foreign country with your new found girlfriend, and maybe even some time to explore the world. The one thing that you may not want to do is commit yourself too far too soon. You're ready to explore the world and have some fun, but before you jump head first into the adult world, you should consider the following. You've been under pressure to complete your college degree for a long time, and that pressure could be leaving you a bit more vulnerable to taking on a job. Even if you are looking for a job in your area, you may be being asked to do more than you are ready to do in your first job. You may need to consider delaying your first job or keeping your options open
