We performed pooled analysis of rare variant associations across 100,000 single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in a discovery sample of individuals with 8 diseases with previously undiagnosed diagnoses and a replication cohort of exome sequence data. Associations were driven by rare variants in risk genes in a majority of cases. No gene-wide significant associations were observed for any of the genes studied in any of the 8 diseases, although there was suggestive evidence for association with a few gene-wide significant or suggestive associations with previously unknown variants in CHEK2, BRCA2, SMARCB1, and PTEN. These genes were previously reported in individual association studies for other diseases. Our results provide preliminary evidence for at least 2 loci beyond those previously described for these 5 uncommon diseases. In a bid to teach appreciation to its own students, a prestigious university in Delhi is planning to give an opening assignment to freshers that would help them appreciate the freedom of expression. According to reports, Delhi University students are asked to either criticize or critique political or social issues during their first three months at the institution. The assignment is aimed to educate the students on the concept of 'Censorship'. During the first days of the term students will receive an assignment that will require them to write a text on a government initiative or policy followed by the assignment. Their further assignments would ask them to either 'critique' or 'criticize' the government's initiative or policy, the report further added. The university will also make students share their opinion on social issues and the concept of censorship. #IndiaCampusStudent #DelhiUniversity offers the freshers three weeks of fake assignment on Censorship by asking students to criticize or critique government policies on social issues. Teachers then ask them to share their opinion on censorship. pic.twitter.com/Qpe8n01b8W — Vidit (@

More than $45 million in Chinese steel purchased in Wisconsin has been sent back to China after the state determined the company that exported it was not eligible for an exemption from new federal tariffs, officials said. The purchases represent more than 8 million tons of steel products, worth over $45 million, sent from Wisconsin steelmakers to China between May and July. Wisconsin steelmakers initially asked that the tariff exemption be extended until Dec. 31, but Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross later granted a three-month extension to Feb. 15. Officials say the exemptions gave them no time to complete due diligence checks. The State Department, which granted the Chinese steelmaker the exemption, will now revoke it, the officials said. "We are reviewing now the President's actions to give Congress an opportunity to act," Ross said in a statement. "On the basis of the findings, we're taking strong enforcement actions to rectify this." Manufacturers that purchase steel from overseas are required to ask for and receive an exemption from President Donald Trump's tariffs. Under the new administration orders, Wisconsin steelmakers said they're planning to buy most of their steel locally, cancel pending orders with overseas suppliers and delay plans to expand facilities. "We have had some challenges navigating this process," U.S. Steel CEO David Burritt said in a statement. "We are confident Auslogics File Recovery Crack is an effective and easy to use program that will recover. Induction of secretory Leydig cells by dexamethasone in immature rats. Immature male rats (35 days of age) injected daily (1 mg/100 g body weight) with dexamethasone for 8 days showed a significant increase in serum testosterone levels (over 400%) and in the number of secretory Leydig cells in the testes. The increase was evident from 4 to 8 days of treatment. Immature male rats injected with oil (control) did not show any such rise in steroid levels or in the number of cells. The increment in serum steroid levels and in the number of secretory Leydig cells was significantly greater in the animals treated with exogenous dexamethasone than in those given with vehicle (oil). This study shows that immature rats show high responsiveness to exogenous dexamethasone in increasing serum testosterone levels and in the number of secretory Leydig cells.

These steroidogenic capacities are greater than those of immature rats treated with oil. Q: What does the number '#' do in shell scripting? Can someone explain me what does this mean?: if [$# -lt 1]; then I could understand if this was one simple line of code, but now I am confused! Thanks A: It means "start with the first argument." E.g. $ echo # test test $ echo $# test 1 This list contains -lt > test > test1 > test2 > test3 > And so on. Also, it can be shortened to [$ if [$# -lt 1]; then...
