Some people have theorized that Photoshop was the cause of artist decline after the dot-com craze. However, in my opinion, Photoshop and use of computers and image manipulation in the artistic community has improved many people's work. I think that the development of digital photography and greater ease in editing and manipulation of images has helped people's artistic efforts. Photoshop is a fantastic tool for learning about the many sophisticated elements that go into making an image. We can see, feel, and do the hard work. These soft, easy-to-use tools can easily hide some of the reality of the complicated tasks involved in making a photo, as illustrated in Figure 2-1. The term Photoshop is short for _Photoshop_. Layers are the most important feature of Photoshop and enable you to create your own custom images with limitless possibilities. All the basic skills are covered and many advanced techniques are provided. One of the strongest features of Photoshop and the reason that most people use it is that you can add artistic license to any image. Q: WCF project to web application i have a WCF project in visual studio 2008, which i will used to consume some web service. I want to convert it to web application. How can i do it? A: You will have to expose it as a regular.NET web service, as opposed to a Windows Service or even a Console Application. Just start adding references to the libraries needed and then add a Web Service section to your project. In the service references, add the service reference (probably named after the type - ServiceReference1.MyServiceInterface). You can then proceed to add methods in a regular fashion. // Copyright (c) 2014, the Dart project authors. Please see the AUTHORS file // for details. All rights reserved. Substance P (SP) immunoreactivity was revealed in many fibres of the rat thyroarytenoid muscle by indirect immunofluorescence and light microscopy. The density of SP fibres and their involvement in nerve terminals were studied in the thyroarytenoid muscle of rat by means of immunofluorescence and electron microscopy. The fine structure of SP fibres was also examined with the use of the immunoperoxidase method. SP fibres were seen to be distributed mainly near blood vessels and they were seen to contain numerous clear and dense-cored vesicles. SP fibres were observed around and inside the muscle cells and blood vessels. SP fibres seemed to be contained in various nerve terminals with which these muscle cells were in close relationship. The SP positive nerve terminals were frequently seen in close proximity to the glandular cells and blood vessels. Sparse SP positive
