Game Skyline VR - Hands-on:

Reviewing the game

After using the Samsung Gear VR for the past few days, I was very curious to install the library of VR games that were provided with the Gear VR. A couple of the apps were interesting and fun to play, however, the overall quality was quite poor. For this review I tried out the latest in the series of Oculus VR games: "Gateball". After briefly playing the first few levels of a lesser-known lesser-regarded game called Skyline VR, I'm ready to now put Gateball VR to the test.

Unsurprisingly, the minute I started playing Gateball, I felt as though I was on a rollercoaster ride filled with good

(a) Field gateball (b) Ice gateball 1. Field gateball It is easy to experience a realistic game through VR. (1) Gameplay: Field gateball is a game in which gateball is played between players by pulling and pushing gateballs (a ball that rolls down the gutter while making noise). The number of players is not limited (1 to 5). In multiplayer, players exchange gateballs. (2) Game scene: the game is played in a field or along a fence. The gateball used is a cylindrical ball made of rubber. Players use the right hand to grab gateballs and keep them away from the fence. Players place one hand on the fence, and the other hand on a gateball. They pull, or push, the gateball using the strength of the biceps muscle, and spin and throw the gateball using the elliptical action of the arms. A player's ability to grab a gateball depends on the technique they use to spin and throw the gateball, and their ability to spin depends on their biceps strength. As the game is an athletic sport, players are in good shape. The reason why players hold onto the fence is to be able to draw a gateball in close while the gateball is going around the field. Game play is over when a player loses his gateball, or in other words, when he cannot grasp it by his biceps. Note: Gates tend to be slippery. Water and mud make it easier for gateballs to slide down. Note: The gateball will tend to go back to the hand that holds it. Players play individually or in groups. Players can play either 1 to 5 players, or a few players vs. all the others. It is also possible to play with a partner or partners using two VR devices. If the player is wearing a headset, gateball VR is played on a handheld device using a w-shaped controller. If players do not wear a headset, they use a w-shaped controller held with both hands. Note: All gateball games in the game content will work if you use both hands. 2. Ice gateball It is difficult to grip gateballs with cold hands, but ice gateballs are frozen gateballs, and are easier to handle. (1) Game play: Players play ice gateball (2) Game scene: Ice gateball is played in an ice rink. Players use the right hand to grab gateballs and keep them away from the fence
