Click for More Reviews [Since the release of the Story of Story we've seen a lot of new players join us. The majority of these are recreating their first character, and often start the Story of Story in the middle. This is where the storytelling comes into play. Instead of being forced to watch cutscenes and read dialog that may or may not apply to your current characters stats, the game allows you to press a dialogue hotkey (like Alt+Q) to activate a dialog selection menu that shows you what dialogues will be available for your character. Instead of being forced to choose dialogues that don't fit your playing style, you can instead accept or reject dialogues and then the game will generate a dialogue based on your interactions. When you accept dialogues, it shows you a progress bar at the bottom of the screen showing how far along the dialogue is, and how many lines are left. You can continue to talk to the person, or do whatever you want. The game tries to stay in character with your emotions and overall point of view (Like for example a very proud person might say "I have now begun to rise"), and you can also choose to skip dialogues. If you want to move forward in the story, you must accept dialogues, and if you want to move forward quickly you can simply skip the missing dialogue. I love this system. Keep in mind that unlike a traditional RPG, the story in the game isn't told linearly with cutscenes and loading screens. You can go back and accept or reject dialogues from other characters all over the world. To get back to the area you were at before, simply click back on the mini-map or the compass button on the top of the screen, and you'll go back to the last area you have been in. Many other RPG games only allow you to fast travel, which is a very inefficient way of traveling when your enemies are all over the place. The game allows you to move your character to different areas. You may want to travel there to talk to a character, or to go to a specific area of the game world. If you travel to an area you haven't been to before, the game will automatically generate a new route to that area for you. When your character walks around in a new area, the game will only allow you to travel to one other location until you reach a new room, dungeon, or area. You can travel freely as long as there is space on the current route, bff6bb2d33

Knock#66689 - Started working on Sat-Sun 6.10.14 +1 I'm seeing this multiple times in the BMW's, often with the fuel warning light, but in my opinion, this can not be the cause. I always replaced the unit with a non defective one and manually reset fuel pressure and pump. I'm using a 1600W Holing Gas Generator from Holing Electronic and Nr.AFE771201BP, stopped using the official Holing generator which was a bit much for my family. If anyone else have ideas on what can cause this, feel free to share. knock666 6th Aug 2014, 20:50 +1 I'm seeing this multiple times in the BMW's, often with the fuel warning light, but in my opinion, this can not be the cause.
