I was somewhat against including it because it's quite short, but it won't harm my review score either. It's also very original in the game mechanic department. Please tell me how it is. A few months ago, I was working in the real estate industry for a few years. I was really enjoying my job and found that I had a knack for it. When I asked my boss (who was also my friend) how I could make more money, he told me about a trust that was for sale. Basically, you could get a 0 down on a property and make it your own. Thanks and have a nice day, your friend, The developer for Techno Tower Defense Click to expand... Hi! Thank you very much for making this game! I recently started playing Techno Tower Defense. I really enjoy the game, and I had a few comments: * When the pop-up appears, it's a bit too close to the screen edge. I had to move my mouse out of the pop-up's way to click the continue button, and the pop-up remained on top of the screen. Is it intended to be that way? * The game seems to freeze if I leave it idle for a while. There are no errors, and when I restart the game, it runs fine. I'm not sure if this is a bug or d41b202975

In this action game, you will play as a rookie cop and you will fight with other opponents in the city. Your goal is to protect the innocent citizens in the different levels. As you play through the levels, you will be given so many objectives that you will be forced to keep switching in your combat vehicle. When you complete your objectives, you will be given new challenges. The game takes place in three different levels with a total of six levels. Within the six levels, there will be different types of encounters that you will encounter in this game. The worst so far, for my third installment of this series, is the P.I. Prototype by Scrabblemania and Atomizer Blasters. It can be considered a "4" at best. At worst, well, very, very worst. When you see this thing appearing on your screen, you had better dive for cover. Here's why: First of all, the game comes pre-loaded with the ZX Spectrum logo. So from the get-go there's no way for anyone seeing this, they'll assume it's a ZX Spectrum game. Unfortunately, the app requires you to select which machine you had. Of course I had a ZX Spectrum 16k, as pictured, but then I also had another machine, my PC, which I also have the games on. The way it's set up, you can't select this option without first installing the game on your portable device, which is a hefty price to pay for one game. Next is the button layout. There are two buttons to the left and right, just like the ZX Spectrum (with the exception of the "-" that used to be there). Harder to turn your "frowny face" into the "happy face". There's no option to turn either off. At the start of each level, you'll be asked if you want to start playing or playing a new game. The "-" and "=" buttons switch between the two. There are three main lanes at the bottom of the board, with a couple of bridges and mazes at the top. They are not vertically or horizontally aligned, and they contain a handful of icons, each containing up to four numbers: 1 through 4. The aim is to get enough points by tapping the icons on the lanes. A score of five is needed to unlock the next level. On my ZX Spectrum, it's not particularly easy to get the top score, most likely due to it being the case of starting with the lower-scoring levels. There's a time limit built into the levels, initially there's 60 seconds and it increases down the line. You can bump the time down, however, and wait a while to kill the time. There's five levels to do, each with a time cap. Sometimes you might not have a time cap, but you should be moving at a decent pace otherwise you'll be entirely blocked in and, whether or not it's a time cap or not, simply never get
